Wegman, photogénie et retoucheur surdoué

du 30 mars au 11 mai 2019

Texte de Frédéric Paul

Comme en son temps Walker Evans, qui en collectionnait et voulut en fabriquer, Wegman collectionne et publie des cartes postales. Ses photographies, comme celles d'Evans après sa mort, ont été popularisées par la diffusion massive de produits dérivés, comme justement des cartes postales, des calendriers, des agendas et albums pour enfants. Mais dans le secret de l'atelier, Wegman poursuit une oeuvre qui ne demande rien à personne et exige énormément de son imagination. Et c'est là qu'interviennent les cartes postales des autres. Comme un peintre collectionne les tubes de couleurs, Wegman s'est mis à les collectionner pour les utiliser. Il en a de vieilles valises en carton remplies. Et il s'en sert de point de départ pour des tableaux de formats variés, dont même les plus grands ne peuvent se regarder de très loin. Il s'en sert aussi comme point d'arrivée, car elles font beaucoup voyager.

Ces tableaux de cartes postales détournent les images choisies en prolongeant tel paysage, en le mettant en relation avec d'autres, en utilisant parfois deux fois la même carte placée tête-bêche et en inventant une histoire dont la cohérence dépend surtout des efforts de l'artiste pour préserver une certaine vraisemblance scénographique et perspective. Ce ne sont pas des cadavres exquis, ce sont des collages délectables en même temps que des peintures appliquées à se contorsionner dans tous les sens. Tous les chemins y mènent n'importe où. Collages et peintures réunis font de ces œuvres souvent formellement Kitsch des tableaux poétiques qui, bien sûr, font sourire, c'est fatal chez Wegman, et qui étonnent par une profondeur que, seules, ne suffisent pas à leur donner leurs vertigineuses lignes de fuites.

On connaît Wegman cinéaste, pionnier et maître incontestable, même s'il est difficile de prendre au sérieux ce qui provoque le rire.

On connaît Wegman photographe, mais je n'ai pas le temps d'entrer ici dans les détails d'une œuvre complexe, qui s'est constamment renouvelée et dont les applications commerciales ont troublé l'appétence du public raffiné mais versatile des galeries d'art contemporain. N'empêche, de bout en bout, que voulez-vous ? ses photos font sourire. Et c'est impardonnable.

On connaît moins l'excellent dessinateur, si précis dans l'expression de ses pénétrantes réflexions sur la perception. Mais une telle précision alliée à une telle concision seraient admirables, si les dessins n'étaient aussi drôles qu'intelligents. Et ceci est infernal.

On connaît moins bien Wegman peintre que photographe mais un peu mieux Wegman peintre que dessinateur. Disons en deux mots qu'il a eu sa période bad puis sa période, comment dire... impressionniste quasi abstraite ? puisque Wegman est un artiste typiquement américain. La première période est drôle et débraillée, la seconde est drôle et excessivement raffinée. On n'échappe pas à la fatalité. C'est toujours le même diagnostic.

Les Postcards Paintings sont conceptuellement entre les dessins et les peintures. Elles sont drôles aussi. Je m'empresse de le dire. Certains en seront consternés, les pauvres ! La photographie n'y est plus qu'une image trouvée, imprimée à des milliers d'exemplaires, pourtant ces peintures sont la continuation des Altered Photographs du milieu des années 70, photos sans intérêt que Wegman, dans une période de doute et d'abondance, entassa dépité jusqu'au moment où il les rendit remarquables en les massacrant, en les incisant, les découpant, les griffonnant avec le meilleur de la verve qu'il a en inépuisable réserve. Les Postcards Paintings sont moins vandales, plus baroques, elles empruntent à plusieurs répertoires graphiques et picturaux stéréotypés, comme les cartes postales elles-mêmes. Elles ont l'efficacité de l'illustration à l'américaine et elles évoquent un passé middle class, un paradis impossible mais prétendument à la portée de tous. L'enfer, c'est les autres et le paradis, c'était avant.

Avec ses œuvres jamais vues en France, on découvrira en Wegman un architecte éclectique, un paysagiste audacieux, un urbaniste tantôt futuriste tantôt nostalgique, un adepte de la mosaïculture, un scénariste sans complexe, un amateur d'art boulimique et éclectique, un touriste affamé... Il va beaucoup nous manquer pour le vernissage, car les valises en carton ne sortent jamais et il voyage surtout dans son atelier.

Maître-chien une partie de son temps, il n'est ni un cynique ni un artiste de niche. Il a l'insigne mérite, et c'est une singularité difficile à porter, d'être populaire au point de toucher un très large public non averti et d'être à la fois un artiste d'artistes (son premier collectionneur fut Edward Ruscha), en tout cas pour tous ceux, amis ou non des animaux, qui ne dédaignent pas qu'une œuvre d'art puisse faire sourire — les autres peuvent toujours ricaner, tant pis pour eux ! Rabat-joie, prudes sectateurs du bon goût sévère, vestales et gardes suisses de la plus distinguée des conventions, superficiels démonstrateurs d'ostentatoire rigueur, zélateurs du dernier cri et du premier vagissement,

Je ne cesse d'admirer William Wegman depuis que par chance j'ai croisé son œuvre. — Un critique d'art, un historien, un conservateur asservis n'écrira jamais dans un style aussi direct, mais on m'a demandé de faire court : d'aller droit au but. Je ne suis pas servile, je suis admiratif.

Wegman, photo-genie and accomplished retoucher

from March 30 to May 11, 2019

Text by Frédéric Paul

Like Walker Evans in his time, William Wegman is a devoted collector of postcards. His own photographs, like the photographs of Evans, have become the subjects of postcards and books and calendars, part of our popular culture. In the privacy of his studio, however, Wegman creates works that don't ask anything from anyone but demand a great deal from his imagination. It is here that the postcards of others come into play. In the same way that a painter collects tubes of colors Wegman collects postcards. He has vintage suitcases filled with them. These postcards serve as the starting point for paintings of varied formats, even the largest of which cannot be looked at from a distance. They begin and end with small format postcard images and what happens in between them is a trip.

In Wegman's postcard paintings a chosen postcard is quickly turned into something new. Landscapes are extended and connected to other images, sometimes inverted, the same card or slightly different versions of the same card may appear side by side. You need to look twice. Juxtapositions create a story whose coherence depends above all on the artist's efforts to preserve a certain scriptural and perspective plausibility. The postcard paintings are not exquisite corpse exercises but delightful collages in which Wegman's painted additions contort perception in every possible way. All roads lead to who knows where. Collage and painting combine to turn what might sometimes appear to be kitsch subject matter into poetry. The paintings surprise with their depth of field and often dizzying vanishing points but they of course also make people smile – inevitable with a Wegman work.

We know Wegman the video-maker, an unquestionable pioneer and master, even if it is sometimes hard to take seriously anything that can make you laugh so much.

We know Wegman the photographer. Whose complex body of work is constantly in the process of being reinvented and whose commercial applications have disturbed the refined but fickle appetite of the sophisticated public of contemporary art galleries. But you expect this from Wegman. Everything about his work makes you smile and for this he is often not forgiven.

We know less the excellent draftsman, so precise in the expression of his reflections on life and on perception. Precision of this kind combined with such insight would be admirable if the drawings weren't as amusing as they are intelligent. And this is diabolical.

We know Wegman less as a painter than as a photographer but a bit more Wegman as a painter than as draftsman. As a painter he had his bad period and – how can we put it – his impressionist almost abstract period. But Wegman is a typically American artist and even this first period was self-consciously "bad" an effort to at the same time reject and partake in the history of painting. The first period is amusing and sloppy, the second is amusing and excessively refined.

The Postcards Paintings are conceptually between drawings and paintings. They are also amusing. I hasten to say so. Some people will be dismayed by them and too bad for them! Photography is no longer anything but a found image, printed in thousands of copies, these paintings however are something unique, a continuation of Wegman's altered photographs from the mid-1970s. During a period of doubt, with money suddenly for printing, Wegman amassed a body of photographs which much to his dismay he found held no interest for him. Then the moment came when he realized that by destroying these photographs – incising them, cutting them up, painting and drawing on them with the audaciousness that he has an inexhaustible store of – he could save them. The Postcards Paintings are less vandalized, more baroque. They borrow from several stereotyped graphic and pictorial repertoires, like the postcards themselves. They have all the efficacy of the American-style illustration and they evoke a middle-class past, an impossible paradise but one that is within reach of everyone. Hell is other people and paradise was before.

With these works that have never before been seen in France, we discover in Wegman an eclectic architect, a daring landscape designer, a sometimes futuristic sometimes nostalgic urban planner, an expert in mosaiculture, a scriptwriter with no inhibitions, an amateur gastronome, a connoisseur of the strange, an ever-curious tourist... He will be very much missed by us at the preview showing as his cardboard suitcases never go outside and he above all travels in his studio.

A dog wrangler part of the time, Wegman is neither a cynic nor a niche artist. He has the remarkable merit – and it is a singularity that is hard to wear – of being popular to the point of reaching a very large public and being at the same time an artists' artist (his first collector was Edward Ruscha), admired by all those, friends of animals or not, who are not adverse to a work of art that can make you smile – the others can always snicker, too bad for them! Killjoys, prudish slaves to good taste guardians at the gate of the most distinguished of conventions, superficial demonstrators of ostentatious rigor, zealots of the dernier cri and the first cry, go elsewhere.

From the moment I came across his work I have never stopped admiring William Wegman. Official art critics, historians and curators will never write in a style as direct as this but I was asked to be brief: to go straight to the point. I am not servile, I am admirative.

William Wegman

est né en 1943 à Holyoke, Massachusetts.

Il a reçu un B.F.A. en peinture au Massachusetts College of Art de Boston en 1965 et un M.F.A. en peinture de l'Université de l'Illinois, Champagne-Urbana en 1967. De 1968 à 1970, il enseigne à l'Université du Wisconsin. À l'automne 1970, il s'installa dans le sud de la Californie où il enseigna pendant un an au California State College, à Long Beach. En 1971, il s'installe à Santa Monica. Au début des années 70, les œuvres de Wegman étaient exposées dans les musées et les galeries du monde entier. Outre des expositions personnelles à la Sonnabend Gallery à Paris et à New York, à la Situation Gallery à Londres et à la Konrad Fisher Gallery à Düsseldorf, son travail a été inclus dans des expositions majeures telles que «When Attitudes Become Form» et «Documenta V». Les Magazines Interfunktionen, Artforum et Avalanche lui consacrent régulièrement des articles.

C'est à Long Beach que Wegman eu son premier chien, un braque de Weimar qu'il nomma Man Ray, et avec lequel il commença une longue et fructueuse collaboration. Man Ray, connu dans le monde de l'art et au-delà pour sa présence impassible, est devenu la figure centrale des photographies et des vidéos de Wegman. À sa mort en 1982, Man Ray, fut élu «Homme de l'année» par Village Voice. Ce n'est qu'en 1986 que Wegman eut un nouveau chien, Fay Ray, et il commença une nouvelle collaboration marquée par l'usage intensif de l'appareil photo Polaroid 20 x 24. Depuis la naissance de Fay en 1989, la famille des chiens a grandi avec sa progéniture - Battina, Crooky et Chundo - et plus tard, leurs propres chiots: Chip, le fils de Battina en 1995, Bobbin, en 1999, et Penny, la fille de Bobbin, en 2004. Grâce à l'implication de Wegman dans ce groupe de personnages, il a développé une série de livres pour enfants inspirés par les divers talents d'acteur des chiens: Cinderella, Little Red Riding Hood, ABC, Mother Goose, Farm Days, My Town, Surprise Party et Chip Wants a Dog. Wegman a également publié un certain nombre de livres pour adultes, notamment Man's Best Friend, Fashion Photographs, William Wegman 20 x 24, The New York Times Bestseller Puppies, Fay, William Wegman: Paintings et le dernier Being Human, édités par William Ewing et publiés par Thames et Hudson à l'automne 2017.

Wegman a fait des films et des vidéos pour Saturday Night Live et Nickelodeon. Ses séquences vidéo pour Sesame Street apparaissent régulièrement à la télévision depuis 1989. En 1995, le film de Wegman, The Hardly Boys, a été projeté au Festival de Sundance. Wegman a été chargé de créer des images pour un large éventail de projets, notamment une campagne de mode pour Acne, des bannières pour le Metropolitan Opera et des couvertures pour de nombreuses publications, notamment The New Yorker et, plus récemment, Wallpaper. Wegman est apparu dans The Tonight Show avec Johnny Carson et avec Jay Leno, The David Letterman Show et The Colbert Report.

De nombreuses rétrospectives du travail de Wegman ont parcouru l'Europe, l'Asie et les États-Unis, notamment: «Wegman's World» au Walker Art Center de Minneapolis en 1981; «William Wegman: Paintings, Drawings, Photographs, Videotapes», qui a ouvert ses portes au Kunstmuseum de Lucerne en 1990 et a voyagé en Europe et aux États-Unis, notamment au Centre Pompidou à Paris et au Whitney Museum of American Art à New York; «Funney / Strange», qui a ouvert ses portes au Brooklyn Museum of Art en 2006 et s'est arrêté au Centre pour les arts Wexner, Columbus à l'automne 2007, et «Hello Nature», qui a ouvert ses portes au Bowdoin Museum of Art en 2012. voyage à Artipelag à Stockholm, en Suède. Les expositions récentes des musées ont inclus des rétrospectives itinérantes au Japon, en Corée et en Espagne et de nombreuses expositions dans des galeries, notamment en 2016 "William Wegman: New and Used Furniture" chez Marc Selwyn Fine Art, Los Angeles; "Good Dogs on Nice Furniture" à la Texas Gallery de Houston et «William Wegman: Paintings» à la Sperone Westwater Gallery de New York. Being Human, une étude à grande échelle portant sur plus de trente ans d'œuvres photographiques de Wegman a été publiée à l'automne 2017 (Chronicle / Thames and Hudson). Une exposition itinérante inspirée du livre a ouvert l'été dernier aux Rencontres d'Arles marquant le début d'une tournée de quatre ans qui comprendra des escales en Australie, en Nouvelle-Zélande, en Asie et Europe. Parmi ses expositions récentes, citons Dressed and Undressed à la Sperone Westwater Gallery et Before / On / After: William Wegman et California Conceptualism au Metropolitan Museum of Art.

En collaboration avec Valérie Sandoz, responsable de l'artothèque de Villeurbanne, la galerie Florence Loewy a organisé en Février 2019 l'exposition William Wegman 80's Music à la MLIS, Maison du livre de l'image et du son de Villeurbanne. En Mars, elle accueille une exposition personnelle consacrée à ses Postcard Paintings qui seront montrées pour la première fois en France.

William Wegman vit à New York et dans le Maine où il continue à peindre, dessiner, réaliser des vidéos et prendre des photos avec ses chiens Flo et Topper.

It was while he was in Long Beach that Wegman got his dog, a Weimaraner who he named Man Ray, and began a long and fruitful collaboration. William Wegman. 80's Music du 15 février au 20 avril 2019

commissariat Galerie Florence Loewy

En 1988, William Wegman réalise, avec le cinéaste américain expérimental Robert Breer, le clip Blue Monday 88 pour le groupe New Order. La vidéo mélange animation et prises de vues réelles pour esquisser un monde aux situations saugrenues qui défie les lois de la pesanteur.

En vedette aux côtés des membres du groupe : Fay Ray. Chien de son état et muse de l'artiste, qui fait ses débuts à l'écran.

Artiste conceptuel américain, William Wegman est mondialement connu pour ses photographies mettant en scène ses chiens, des braques de Weimar. C'est le hasard qui en 1970, scelle le destin de l'artiste. Alors enseignant en Californie, William Wegman, achète un braque de Weimar, appelé Man Ray en hommage au célèbre Surréaliste. Cette anecdote domestique va devenir un élément déterminant : c'est avec Man Ray, puis Fay Ray et ses descendants que Wegman réalisera la plupart de ses vidéos et bientôt la majorité de ses photographies. Avec Man Ray, il poursuit sa quête identitaire et entame une réflexion sur les comportements humains.

En 1979, William Wegman est invité par la firme Polaroid à tester un nouvel appareil couleur de grand format 20 x 24 pouces. Inspiré par ce nouveau procédé, il produit ses premiers clichés couleur et réalisera avec lui ses photographies les plus marquantes, mettant en scène Man Ray et ses successeurs. À la mort de Man Ray en 1982, Wegman continue l'exploration du Polaroid géant avec des sujets non canins. Cette période « between dogs », selon les mots de l'artiste, donne lieu à des photographies singulières. Clichés empreints de nostalgie, où le chien semble s'être évaporé au profit du décor (Polarity, 1983 et Seasonal, 1984). Saynètes drôles et décalées, souvent absurdes, mettant en scène les assistants de Wegman dans des occupations banals (Pool Party, 1982, Monkey and the Third Position, 1984) ou des parodies de publicités (Eau I, 1982, Crisco, 1983).

En 1986, Fay Ray succède à Man Ray. Ainsi nommée d'après Fay Wray, l'actrice du King Kong de 1933 et en référence au premier Polaroid couleur pris de son illustre prédécesseur, les ongles vernis, intitulé Fay Ray. Avec Fay, la magie reprend. La sublime Fay « devient l'âme du travail » de Weg-man, le sujet de ses Polaroids. Fay hypnotisée par une boule à facettes (Hypno, 1988). Fay jouant au Twister (Twister, 1988). Fay posant en robe fleurie (Three Legged Dance, 1988). C'est naturellement Fay qui sera la vedette d'une série de films réalisés à partir de 1989 par Wegman pour l'émission de télévision éducative pour enfants Sesame Street. Dans ces court-métrages désopilants, portés par la voix-off de l'artiste, Fay - et bientôt ses trois puppies – apparaissent affublés d'accessoires ou costumés, s'initiant aux chiffres (Subtraction, 1989 / Farmer Mac Fay, 1994) ou présentant différents métiers : coiffeur, mécanicien ou serveur (The People Of Your Neighborhood, 1998). À la même période, Fay est l'héroïne de livres illustrés pour enfants : Little Riding Hood et Cinderella, publiés par Wegman en 1993, versions canines du Petit Chaperon Rouge et de Cendrillon.

Imaginée par William Wegman et la Galerie Florence Loewy, autour du clip Blue Monday 88, l'exposition 80's Music dévoile une facette peu montrée de l'oeuvre de l'artiste : un choix unique de dix-huit Polaroids, produits entre 1982 et 1994, avec et sans chien. Elle met aussi en lumière Fay Ray, muse fidèle qui, de 1986 à 1995, sert la renommée de son maître, se prêtant corps et âme à sa vocation de modèle photographique et d'actrice, dans un clip pour New Order et des films pour Sesame Street.

Aujourd'hui, William Wegman est une star. Comme Man Ray, acteur des premières vidéos de l'artiste, qui ont intégré récemment les collections du prestigieux Metropolitan Museum of Art de New York. Comme Batty, Crooky et Chundo, qui au début des années 1990, passent quotidiennement à la télévision dans le show Sesame Street. Comme Chip, Penny et Candy, « dog-models » pour la campagne Max Mara en 2001. Comme Fay Ray propulsée, par hasard, icône New Wave par une musique emblématique des eighties, qui pourrait être la bande son de l'exposition.
